

Week 2 Recap — FoulknFootball (2025)

Generated 2026-04-27 00:27 UTC.

Intro

Two weeks is not enough to settle FoulknFootball, but it is enough to start sorting the noise from the signal. The standings already have a shape now. Jake is the only manager at 2-0, Devin is the only one at 0-2, and the middle of the league is crowded enough that one Sunday can still move a team several places at once.

The highest-scoring game gave us the clearest example. Brian's 232.48 in a win over Dave was the top number on the board, and it came one week after First in and First Out? was the team chasing from behind in the standings. That climb from fifth to second has company elsewhere — Michael is up three spots too, while Rob's slide from first to sixth in both the standings and power rankings is the kind of early correction that gets noticed without needing any panic attached to it.

League Themes

Brian owned the week's biggest number, and his lineup also supplied two of the five best individual performances. Malik Nabers gave First in and First Out? 28.7, Jonathan Taylor added 27.5, and together they helped turn a close projection into the week's clearest statement. Amon-Ra St. Brown led the full list at 30.2 for Devin, which is the sort of isolated excellence that can look a little lonely when the record says 0-2. Rob still got 26.3 from Lamar Jackson in a losing effort, and Dave had 25.5 from James Cook, but this week belonged to the teams that stacked star turns instead of leaning on one.

The most useful waiver result came from Jake. Troy Franklin produced 16 points, the best total among this week's additions, and that is the kind of margin that matters in a 9.5-point win like Seasonal Depression's result over BearDown. Rob also found a workable quarterback fill-in with Jake Browning at 17.74, though Unstoppable Farce could not turn it into a win. There were no trades on the ledger this week, so the movement came through waivers and lineup choices rather than any larger roster reshaping.

A few of the strangest stat lines told the week's story just as clearly as the stars did. Derrick Henry's 2.3 against a 28.2 projection was the sharpest drop on the board, and Jalen Hurts landing at 11.5 against 24.3 pulled Rob's lineup even further off course. Devin got the opposite jolt from Amon-Ra St. Brown, who turned a 4.5-point projection into 30.2, while Brian benefited from two more projection-breakers in Nabers and Taylor. When a week swings this hard at the top and bottom of expected output, the standings start to feel less theoretical.

The power table sharpened too. Brian jumped three spots to No. 1, which fits both the weekly high score and the league-best 409.42 points for through two weeks. Michael was another notable riser, up three spots to fifth after opening with the league's lowest rank, while Rob's five-spot drop to sixth is the week's clearest warning sign. The larger point is simple: Jake holds first place in the standings, but the early pressure at the top now comes from Brian's scoring pace, and FoulknFootball has moved from introductions into comparisons.

Game by Game

First in and First Out? (232.48) vs He hate me (173.76)

Brian turns a projected toss-up into a clear Week 2 answer.

Week 2 in FoulknFootball brought one of the more useful early measurements on the board. Brian's First in and First Out? had scored well in defeat last week, Dave's He hate me had opened with a win, and by Sunday night the question was whether Brian's roster had another gear. It did, and First in and First Out? pulled away 232.48 to 173.76.

The hero was Malik Nabers. Brian got 28.7 points from the Giants wide receiver against Dallas, built on 9 catches, 167 yards, and 2 touchdowns, and he had plenty of company. Rome Odunze added 24.8 for Chicago on 7 catches for 128 yards and 2 scores, Jonathan Taylor gave Indianapolis 27.5 worth of production with 165 rushing yards plus a receiving touchdown, and Bijan Robinson's 143 rushing yards kept the floor firm. The sharp observation was simple: Brian reached 232.48 even with quiet returns from Dalton Kincaid, T.J. Hockenson, and Zay Flowers.

On the other side, Dave had enough offense to win plenty of weeks. James Cook ran for 132 yards and 2 touchdowns for Buffalo and finished with 25.5, Bo Nix threw 3 touchdown passes for Denver and scored 20.24, and Davante Adams chipped in 16.6 on 106 yards and a score for the Rams. And yet, this matchup turned at quarterback, where Josh Allen's 11.82 came in well short of the 38.76 he gave Dave in Week 1.

There was also a lineup note that mattered. Dave left 33.96 points from Jared Goff on the bench, and the could-have-been total tells the story neatly enough: He hate me had 60.66 points of unused production, while Brian's bench swing was just 12.28.

The consequence is immediate in FoulknFootball. Brian moves from 0-1 to 1-1 and gets the validating result his Week 1 score hinted at, while Dave's opening win gives way to a 1-1 split as First in and First Out? looks to build momentum.

Disappointment (185.78) vs Amon Another level (161.62)

Michael's Disappointment finds its footing, handing Devin an 0-2 start.

There was a little weight on this one in Week 2 of FoulknFootball. Disappointment and Amon Another level both came in off opening losses, and by the end of the weekend it was Michael who had the steadier total, beating Devin 185.78 to 161.62. The margin was healthy, though this was not a one-player game so much as one lineup that kept finding useful numbers.

The hero was Patrick Mahomes. Michael got 22.08 from the Kansas City quarterback, and Baker Mayfield added 19.9 behind him to give Disappointment a strong base at the two-quarterback spots. Jahmyr Gibbs supplied 16.4 for Detroit, Kenneth Walker ran for 105 yards and a touchdown on his way to 17.8, and Michael also got quiet but meaningful help from two defenses and two kickers, including 20.0 from Dallas kicker Brandon Aubrey and 16.0 from Baltimore's defense.

On the other side, Devin had the biggest single performance in the matchup. Amon-Ra St. Brown was outstanding for Detroit, catching nine passes for 115 yards and three touchdowns to score 30.2, while Saquon Barkley, J.K. Dobbins, David Montgomery, and Tyreek Hill each did their part. And yet the game turned at quarterback, where Joe Burrow finished with 7.04 and Justin Fields managed 3.98, a shortfall that even St. Brown's afternoon could not fully erase.

That was the sharp difference. Michael survived several quiet receiver lines — A.J. Brown scored 2.7, DJ Moore 4.6, and Calvin Austin 2.2 — because the structure of the roster held everywhere else, while Devin's lineup asked too much of its wideouts to cover the gap left by the passers and Hunter Henry's 0.9 at tight end. Russell Wilson's 30.3 remained on Devin's bench, but the more telling point is simpler: Disappointment got enough from enough places.

The immediate consequence is clear in the FoulknFootball table. Michael moves to 1-1 and gets Disappointment off the bottom line after last week's narrow loss, while Devin falls to 0-2 despite putting up 161.62, and now has to chase from behind as Michael will look to build momentum.

Seasonal Depression (164.62) vs BearDown (155.12)

Jake's depth carries Seasonal Depression past Dakota.

Week 2 in FoulknFootball asked a cleaner question than the projection suggested. Could Seasonal Depression survive a few misses and still keep scoring. Jake did exactly that, edging Dakota's BearDown 164.62 to 155.12 in a game where both teams cleared the projection and neither side had much room to hide.

The hero for Jake was Puka Nacua, who gave the Rams 19.6 points on eight catches for 91 yards and added a 45-yard rushing touchdown against Tennessee. Javonte Williams, now with Dallas, added 19.0, Jameson Williams brought 16.8 for Detroit on just two catches, and Josh Jacobs supplied 14.4 for Green Bay. The call last week to ride Seasonal Depression held up on the winner, but it was right team, wrong shape — the forecast had this at 161.4 to 117.9, and Dakota pushed it into a much tighter game.

On the other side, BearDown had the best individual number in the matchup. Ja'Marr Chase went for 22.5 on 14 catches, 165 yards, and a touchdown for Cincinnati, while Dak Prescott added 22.14 for Dallas and George Pickens turned nine targets into 12.8 and a score. And yet, the soft spots were just a little too soft. Marvin Harrison managed 2.7 for Arizona, Omarion Hampton finished with 2.5 for the Chargers, and Xavier Legette slipped to -0.2 despite eight targets for Carolina.

That was the sharp difference. Jake absorbed a 2.82 from Vikings quarterback J.J. McCarthy and quiet days from Garrett Wilson, Brenton Strange, and Evan Engram, but Seasonal Depression kept finding usable points elsewhere with Sam Darnold at 15.8, Arizona's defense at 14.0, Quentin Johnston at 12.9, and two kickers combining for 17.0. Dakota had enough star power to stay in range, though BearDown left real points on the bench with Wan'Dale Robinson's 20.2 and Zach Ertz's 12.4, and that margin mattered in a 9.50-point result.

The consequence is immediate in the Week 2 table. Jake moves to 2-0 and keeps Seasonal Depression building momentum near the top of FoulknFootball, while Dakota falls back to 1-1 after a loss that still carried 155.12 points.

Sanders Boutte on Sunday (167.98) vs Unstoppable Farce (118.14)

Eric answers early with a measured Week 2 win over Rob.

Week 2 in FoulknFootball had a simple bit of tension attached to this one. Rob came in off the league's highest score in the opener, Eric came in trying to steady Sanders Boutte on Sunday after a loss, and by the end it was Eric's deeper card that carried the day, 167.98 to 118.14.

Jayden Daniels was the hero at the top for Eric, giving Sanders Boutte on Sunday 19.7 points with 200 passing yards and two touchdowns for Washington. Around him, Tucker Kraft of Green Bay added 18.4 on six catches for 124 yards and a score, Christian McCaffrey put up 16.7 for San Francisco, Nick Chubb supplied 13.2 with a rushing touchdown, and Eric got a quiet but important lift from both defenses and Matt Prater’s 14.0. We picked Unstoppable Farce last week at 188.6-136.1, so this was right team, wrong shape in the clearest sense; the expected Rob edge never arrived, and Eric’s lineup found enough answers even with Breece Hall at 3.8 and Courtland Sutton at 0.6.

On the other side, Rob got what looked like a strong foundation from Lamar Jackson. The Baltimore quarterback threw four touchdown passes and scored 26.3, while De’Von Achane gave Unstoppable Farce 18.2 and Jaylen Warren added 13.4. And yet, too much of the middle and bottom of the lineup stayed quiet at once. Derrick Henry managed 2.3, Aaron Jones matched him at 2.3, Keon Coleman finished at 2.6, Mark Andrews had 0.4, and Jayden Reed posted 0.0.

That was the sharp difference in the game. Eric did not need one overwhelming performance because Sanders Boutte on Sunday kept stacking competent numbers across the lineup, while Rob’s roster asked Lamar Jackson to cover for too many empty spots all by himself.

The consequence is immediate. Eric moves Sanders Boutte on Sunday to 1-1 in FoulknFootball and hands Rob’s Unstoppable Farce its first loss after that opening-week climb to the top of the standings.

Storylines

- Brian’s push to match the best record in the league is the cleanest next step after moving to No. 1 in the power rankings.
- Devin has the early pressure point of the season already, because an 0-3 start would make the climb back into the top four feel much steeper.
- Michael’s rise from eighth to fifth now gets its best test, with a chance to turn one rebound week into a real place in the playoff conversation.
- Rob and Dave get the one brief family note this week, but the sharper angle is whether He hate me can validate its projection edge against a team that has already fallen five spots.

Predictions

- Seasonal Depression reaches 3-0 with a win of 10 or more points, and the league's only active win streak extends from 2 to 3.
- First in and First Out? scores at least 170 points for the third straight week on this current run, and remains in the top two of the standings after Week 3.
- He hate me beats Unstoppable Farce by at least 20 points, a result that fits the current No. 3 vs No. 6 power-ranking gap.
- Amon Another level ends its 2-game losing streak by topping 125 points and holding BearDown under 123.
- Two favorites from the current projected top four win in clear fashion: He hate me and First in and First Out? combine for at least 345 points.
