

Week 3 Recap — FoulknFootball (2025)

Generated 2026-04-27 00:28 UTC.

Intro

Three weeks in, FoulknFootball is starting to tell the truth about itself. Brian sits on top of the standings and the power rankings after another strong week, Dave posted the week's best number at 207.50, and the middle of the table remains crowded enough that one result still changes the whole picture. That is the useful part of this point in the season. The good teams are showing repeatable ways to score, and the teams below them are beginning to reveal where the stress points live.

The highest-scoring game of the week carried that message cleanly. Dave beat Rob 207.50 to 185.96, and He hate me did it with both spike weeks and support around them, while Unstoppable Farce got plenty at the top but still absorbed a second straight loss. Brian's rise from second to first now looks less like an early shuffle and more like a profile, while Eric's fall from fourth to eighth in the standings and power table is the kind of drop that gets harder to explain away once the calendar starts moving toward the bye weeks.

League Themes

The best individual performance of Week 3 came from a defense, and that felt fitting for a week that had a little more edge to it. Dave got 35.0 from the Minnesota Vikings defense in the win over Rob, Jonathan Taylor added 29.8 for Brian, Caleb Williams gave Dakota 29.12 in a losing effort, Jalen Hurts scored 29.04 for Rob, and David Montgomery turned in 28.4 for Devin. The larger point was balance. Dave had the week's top score, Brian kept his league-leading pace intact, and Michael's narrow win over Jake showed that a solid card across the lineup still matters as much as one star turn.

The most useful waiver hit belonged to Jake even in defeat. Tre Tucker delivered 32.9, by far the best return among the week's adds, and that is the kind of pickup that usually changes a matchup on its own. It nearly did. Rob got a usable 13.1 from Tyquan Thornton, while Michael's wide receiver adds never really moved the needle, and Eric's DeAndre Hopkins claim gave him very little help. If there was one team that moved most sharply despite the record, it was Devin's Amon Another level , up two spots in the power rankings to sixth after finally getting into the win column.

Trades gave the week a little extra texture, especially the quarterback traffic between Rob and Dave. Lamar Jackson's 27.02 points landed with Dave, while Bo Nix's 13.42 went to Rob, and that gap fit the final score neatly enough. Rob also dealt for Jauan Jennings, while Michael brought in Jaylen Warren, and Jake picked up Daniel Jones in a move that returned 15.82 points. At this stage of the season, that kind of roster churn is usually less about headlines and more about trying to navigate the competitive landscape before depth gets tested harder.

A few stat lines landed with enough force to shape the whole week. David Montgomery's 28.4 against an 8.2 projection was the cleanest overperformance on the board, while Russell Wilson's 5.1 against 20.7, Malik Nabers' 1.3 against 17.9, Zay Flowers' 1.3 against 14.5, and Ja'Marr Chase's 3.9 against 12.6 all pulled teams away from their expected script. That helps explain why Michael was able to hand Jake the narrowest loss of the week at 163.38 to 157.64, and why Eric's slide continued so abruptly. The biggest mover remains Sanders

Boutte on Sunday, down four spots in the power rankings from last week, and that is a drop that asks for a response soon.

Game by Game

He hate me (207.50) vs Unstoppable Farce (185.96)

He hate me has the steadier answers in a 207.50–185.96 win over Unstoppable Farce.

Week 3 in FoulknFootball brought two teams that needed a cleaner read after uneven second weeks, and the scoreboard gave one. Dave's He hate me beat Rob's Unstoppable Farce 207.50 to 185.96, a healthy number on both sides and a result that was less about one eruption than a roster that kept adding useful totals. Dave got 23.02 from Josh Allen for Buffalo, 17.80 from James Cook in the same Bills-Miami game, 17.20 from Kyren Williams of the Rams, and 15.60 from Seattle wideout Jaxon Smith-Njigba.

The hero was Minnesota's defense. Thirty-five points from a D/ST will settle a lot of arguments, and it gave He hate me the kind of lift that let quieter days elsewhere pass without much damage. Jared Goff finished at 12.68 against Baltimore, Alvin Kamara scored 5.60 for New Orleans, and Sam LaPorta gave Dave just 3.30 — and yet the call to ride He hate me held up only in the broadest sense. The pick was right, but this was right team, wrong shape: projected at 171.8–145.1, it arrived as a much bigger game at 207.50–185.96.

On the other side, Rob had more than enough top-end production to win many weeks. Jalen Hurts led Unstoppable Farce with 29.04 for Philadelphia against the Rams, Lamar Jackson added 27.02 for Baltimore against Detroit, and Mark Andrews turned six catches into 91 yards and two touchdowns for 21.10. The problem was simpler than dramatic. Too much of the receiver room stayed modest at once, with Keon Coleman at 2.00, Travis Hunter at 2.10, Ladd McConkey at 4.10, and Brian Thomas at 5.50.

That was the shape of the afternoon. Rob's quarterbacks and tight end gave Unstoppable Farce a strong spine, while Dave won the wider map with two quarterbacks over 12, three running backs at 17.20 or better, two kickers combining for 15.00, and that 35.00 from Minnesota. In a league trying to navigate the competitive landscape of an early season, the sharp observation is this: He hate me reached 207.50 without a single starter topping 35, because Dave never really gave away a position.

The consequence is immediate and specific. Dave stops a one-game skid after last week's loss to Brian and gives He hate me a second win through three weeks, while Rob's Unstoppable Farce drops a second straight after opening 1-0.

Amon Another level (183.24) vs BearDown (162.36)

Devin gets off the mat as Amon Another level tops Dakota.

Week 3 in FoulknFootball gave Devin the kind of result that can settle a room. Amon Another level, the league's only 0-2 team coming in, put up 183.24 and beat Dakota's BearDown 162.36, a margin built less on one overwhelming wave than on a lineup that kept answering. The projection leaned Devin's way, but the real work came in outscoring a strong BearDown total that would have threatened most of the league.

The hero was David Montgomery. Houston's back gave Devin 28.4 points on 151 rushing yards and 2 touchdowns against Baltimore, and Hunter Henry added a major lift for New England with 8 catches, 90 yards, and 2 scores for 21.0. Tampa Bay's defense chipped in 15.0, J.K. Dobbins of Denver added 14.3, and Amon-Ra

St. Brown gave Detroit 13.7. The sharp note here is that Devin got to 183.24 even with Russell Wilson at 5.1 and Saquon Barkley at 5.5.

On the other side, Dakota had enough production to win plenty of weeks. Caleb Williams of Chicago led the way with 29.12 on 298 passing yards and 4 touchdowns, Jordan Mason added 23.6 for Minnesota on 116 rushing yards and 2 scores, Omarion Hampton gave the Chargers 18.9, and Pittsburgh's defense supplied 20.0. And yet, BearDown asked too many quiet spots to hold at once, with Deebo Samuel at 2.9, Travis Kelce at 2.6, James Conner at 3.7, and Ja'Marr Chase at 3.9.

There was also one lineup note that sits plainly in the numbers. Dakota left 25.1 coulda-shoulda points on the bench, with Cam Skattebo's 18.1 for the Giants standing out most clearly, while Devin's unused swing was just 8.3. That is often how a solid score turns into a loss in a league trying to navigate the competitive landscape.

The consequence is immediate and specific. Devin's losing streak ends at two, and after opening 0-2, Amon Another level finally has its first win of the 2025 season.

Disappointment (163.38) vs Seasonal Depression (157.64)

Disappointment edges Seasonal Depression as Michael flips the Week 3 script.

Week 3 in FoulknFootball brought a result that was close all the way through and useful for both the standings and the early read on these teams. Michael's Disappointment came in as the underdog against Jake's Seasonal Depression, then answered with a 163.38 to 157.64 win. It was not a spotless lineup on either side, but it was a game with enough scoring to matter.

The hero was Jahmyr Gibbs. Michael got 21.9 from the Detroit back against Baltimore, and Kenneth Walker added 17.0 with two rushing touchdowns for Kansas City against New Orleans. A.J. Brown, back in the middle of the Philadelphia offense, gave Disappointment 16.9 on six catches for 109 yards and a score, while Baker Mayfield's 17.72 provided needed steadiness even as Patrick Mahomes finished at 13.16, well below his projection.

On the other side, Jake had enough production to win many weeks. Sam Darnold gave Seasonal Depression 16.72 with two touchdown passes for Seattle against New Orleans, Garrett Wilson caught 10 balls for 84 yards and a touchdown for the Jets, and Michael Pittman added 13.3 with a score. And yet, one empty line is hard to carry in a game this tight. Isaac TeSlaa's 0.0 for Detroit sat alongside lighter returns from Jameson Williams at 4.3 and Javonte Williams at 7.2, and the margin stayed with Michael.

There were missed chances on both benches, which is part of how teams navigate the competitive landscape this time of year. Michael left 26.06 from Geno Smith on the bench, with Jake Ferguson's 8.2 also available at tight end, while Jake had 16.8 from Luther Burden and 10.5 from Khalil Shakir unused. The sharper point is simpler: Disappointment got just enough from its best players to survive the quieter spots, including a -4.0 from Baltimore's defense and only 1.5 from Tee Higgins.

The consequence is clear. Jake's Week 2 recap ended with Seasonal Depression as the league's hot hand at 2-0, and Michael is the one who stopped that streak here, handing Disappointment a second straight win while ending Seasonal Depression's unbeaten start.

First in and First Out? (185.72) vs Sanders Boutte on Sunday (129.94)

Brian's depth carries First in and First Out? past Eric.

Week 3 in FoulknFootball brought a matchup that looked clean on paper and stayed that way on the scoreboard. Brian's First in and First Out? handled Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday, 185.72 to 129.94, and the margin was established even with a few quiet spots in Brian's lineup. There was no need for one perfect card; the roster had enough weight across it to separate.

Jonathan Taylor was the hero. Brian got 29.8 from the Colts running back against Tennessee, built on 102 rushing yards and 3 touchdowns, and he had sturdy support from Nico Collins' 14.4 for Houston, the Seahawks' 16.0 on defense, and the Colts' 15.0 on defense. T.J. Hockenson also gave Brian a useful lift with 10.9 for Minnesota against Cincinnati. The call to ride First in and First Out? held up, though it was right team, wrong shape — projected 176.4 to 131.8, delivered 185.72 to 129.94.

On the other side, Eric had one number that kept this from getting away even earlier. Chase McLaughlin's 21.0 for Tampa Bay against the Jets was his best return of the week, while Courtland Sutton added 17.8 for Denver and Christian McCaffrey supplied 14.0 for San Francisco. And yet, Sanders Boutte on Sunday asked for too much from too many low totals at once. Michael Penix finished at 3.78, Chase Brown at 2.0, Nick Chubb at 4.0, and CeeDee Lamb gave Eric 0.0.

That was the sharp difference. Brian survived busts from Malik Nabers, Jerry Jeudy, and Zay Flowers because Taylor gave him the kind of anchor that lets the rest of a lineup breathe, while Eric's better pieces never had enough company around them to navigate the competitive landscape of a deep starting format.

The consequence is straightforward in FoulknFootball. Brian's win starts a two-game streak after last week's 232.48, while Eric's Week 2 win gives way to a 1-2 mark and sends Sanders Boutte on Sunday back under .500.

Storylines

- Brian now has the clearest early case as the team to catch, and another strong week would start to separate First in and First Out? from the 2-1 pack.
- Michael and Dave are both inside the projected top four, so their Week 4 results matter a little more than the standings usually do in late September.
- Rob is sitting just outside the projected playoff field, and another loss would make the climb feel steeper than his scoring total suggests it should.
- Eric and Dakota meet from the bottom two spots in the standings, which makes this a useful early measure of who can stop the slide first.

Standings (snapshot)

Rank	Team	Owner	W-L-T	Streak	PF	PA
1	First in and First Out?	Brian	2-1-0	W2	595.14	502.24
2	He hate me	Dave	2-1-0	W1	561.26	577.38
3	Seasonal Depression	Jake	2-1-0	L1	519.96	462.24
4	Disappointment	Michael	2-1-0	W2	487.16	458.68
5	Unstoppable Farce	Rob	1-2-0	L2	502.64	552.42
6	Amon Another level	Devin	1-2-0	W1	488.60	545.84

Rank	Team	Owner	W-L-T	Streak	PF	PA
7	BearDown	Dakota	1-2-0	L2	456.90	485.86
8	Sanders Boutte on Sunday	Eric	1-2-0	L1	456.86	483.86

Power rankings

#	Move	Team	Owner	Power	Last-3 PF
1	—	First in and First Out?	Brian	95.0	198.38
2	▲ 1	He hate me	Dave	90.2	187.09
3	▽ 1	Seasonal Depression	Jake	84.3	173.32
4	▲ 1	Disappointment	Michael	79.6	162.39
5	▲ 1	Unstoppable Farce	Rob	76.8	167.55
6	▲ 2	Amon Another level	Devin	74.8	162.87
7	—	BearDown	Dakota	70.3	152.30
8	▽ 4	Sanders Boutte on Sunday	Eric	70.3	152.29

Season ledger

Hot hand: First in and First Out? (W2), Disappointment (W2). Cold spell: Unstoppable Farce (L2), BearDown (L2).

Forecast

Matchup	Pick	Projected Score	Confidence	X-Factor
Unstoppable Farce vs Seasonal Depression	Seasonal Depression	151.6 – 127.9	Lock	Seasonal Depression still top-three power
Amon Another level vs First in and First Out?	First in and First Out?	176.4 – 133.8	Lock	First in and First Out? on W2
Disappointment vs He hate me	He hate me	170.2 – 141.5	Lock	Disappointment's W2 meets rising He hate me
Sanders Boutte on Sunday vs BearDown	BearDown	121.8 – 114.2	Lean	Sanders Boutte on Sunday trending down

Predictions

- Seasonal Depression wins by at least 18 points, and Unstoppable Farce's losing streak reaches 3 games.
- First in and First Out? clears 170 points again, improves to a 3-game winning streak, and stays No. 1 in the power picture.

- He hate me beats Disappointment by at least 20, ending Disappointment's 2-game winning streak and pushing He hate me to 3-1.
- BearDown scores at least 120 in a win over Sanders Boutte on Sunday, snapping its 2-game losing streak while keeping Sanders Boutte on Sunday below 116.
- By the end of Week 4, the projected top four remains First in and First Out?, He hate me, Seasonal Depression, and Disappointment, with Disappointment holding the fourth spot at 2-2 on points-for tiebreak ground.