

Week 4 Recap — FoulknFootball (2025)

Generated 2026-04-27 00:29 UTC.

Intro

Four weeks in, FoulknFootball is giving a cleaner read. The top of the table is not just winning, it is winning in recognizable ways, and the teams near the bottom are starting to see the same pressure points each Sunday. Brian remains first in both standings and power, Jake and Dave are close enough to matter every week, and the middle already has that familiar early-season tension where one result changes the shape of the bracket.

The week's highest-scoring game said most of it out loud. Brian's First in and First Out? put up 219.70 in a win over Devin, and it came with the kind of steady force that is becoming a pattern rather than an exception. BearDown's rise from seventh to fourth, which we flagged last week, now looks real after a 196.74-point answer. Rob and Eric, meanwhile, are finding out that decent totals are no protection if the full lineup does not arrive.

League Themes

The best players of Week 4 came from teams that already feel established. Jake got 31.5 from Ashton Jeanty and 27.7 from Josh Jacobs in Seasonal Depression's win, the sort of backfield pairing that gives a lineup a firm floor and a little reach beyond it. Dakota received 30.96 from Dak Prescott in BearDown's needed result, Patrick Mahomes gave Michael 27.3 in a losing effort, and Justin Fields supplied 27.14 for Devin. There is a shape to the top of FoulknFootball now: Brian, Dave, and Jake have all scored 150 or more in all four weeks, and that kind of repeatability tends to travel well into October.

The most useful waiver work belonged to Rob, even in defeat. Woody Marks produced 23.9 points for Unstoppable Farce, comfortably the best return among this week's adds, and Darren Waller added another 14.7 as Rob tried to patch over a roster that has now dropped three straight. Devin also found a workable quarterback week in Jaxson Dart at 19.84, while Michael got a smaller return from Luke McCaffrey. There were no trades on the board this week, which left the wire as the only real instrument for teams trying to look to refine the edges of their roster before byes begin to force harder choices.

A few stat lines bent matchups away from their expected script. Jeanty's 31.5 on a 6.9 projection was the loudest number on the page, and Josh Jacobs was not far behind at 27.7 against 11.6. Dak Prescott more than doubled his 14.0 projection with 31.0, and George Pickens turned 9.5 expected points into 25.4. On the other side, Lamar Jackson's 10.7 against 27.6, Jonathan Taylor's 9.6 against 22.4, Malik Nabers' 2.0 against 12.4, and David Montgomery's 1.2 against 14.9 all helped explain why a few favored teams came up short. The biggest mover in the power rankings was BearDown, up three spots to fourth, and that climb looks earned rather than temporary.

Game by Game

First in and First Out? (219.70) vs Amon Another level (176.08)

Brian stays on top as First in and First Out? handles Devin.

Week 4 in FoulknFootball brought the league leader into a matchup with a Devin team that had just found its footing, and Brian answered with another number that carries weight. First in and First Out? beat Amon Another level 219.70 to 176.08, clearing its projection by nearly 40 points and putting this one out of reach with strength across the middle of the lineup. It was not a perfect card, but it was a deep one.

The hero was Jordan Love. Brian got 26.28 from the Green Bay quarterback against Dallas, and the support around him was steady and substantial: Bijan Robinson gave Atlanta 24.10, Bucky Irving piled up 20.50 for Tampa Bay against Philadelphia, Travis Etienne added 18.50 for New Orleans, Quinshon Judkins scored 17.50 for Cleveland, and Detroit's defense delivered 20.00. The sharp point is simple. Brian reached 219.70 even while carrying just 2.00 from Malik Nabers of the Giants and 9.60 from Jonathan Taylor of Indianapolis.

On the other side, Devin had enough offense to make a game of it for a while. Justin Fields led the way with 27.14 for Kansas City against Miami, Jaxson Dart added 19.84 for the Giants against the Chargers, Amon-Ra St. Brown scored 19.00 for Detroit, and Dallas Goedert gave Philadelphia 15.70 on two touchdown catches against Tampa Bay. And yet, too many lighter spots arrived at once. David Montgomery's 1.20, DeVonta Smith's 2.90, and Cooper Kupp's 2.60 left Amon Another level chasing a fuller lineup.

There was not much to second-guess in Devin's setup, with only 20.8 coulda-shoulda points left unused. Brian, meanwhile, left more on the bench than he needed, including 23.70 from Justice Hill and 23.80 from Romeo Doubs, which says something about the shape of this roster on a week when even the misses were survivable.

The consequence is clear. After entering Week 4 on a two-game winning streak and sitting first in the Week 3 standings, Brian extends that run to three straight and keeps First in and First Out? in the league's top seat.

Seasonal Depression (211.46) vs Unstoppable Farce (179.44)

Seasonal Depression has the bigger answers in a 211.46–179.44 win over Unstoppable Farce.

Week 4 in FoulknFootball brought a matchup with real weight for two teams coming off very different Sundays, and Jake's Seasonal Depression controlled the shape of it early. The final was 211.46 to 179.44 over Rob's Unstoppable Farce, a strong total on both sides but one that kept leaning back toward Jake whenever the board seemed ready to tighten. Ashton Jeanty of the Raiders was the hero with 31.5 points against Chicago, and Josh Jacobs gave Green Bay 27.7 more in a lineup that had room for star turns and support.

The numbers tell you why the margin held. Puka Nacua caught 13 balls for 170 yards and a touchdown for the Rams on his way to 23.0, Quentin Johnston added 15.8 for the Chargers, Garrett Wilson posted 14.2 for the Jets, and Javonte Williams chipped in 16.0 for Dallas. Seasonal Depression also survived a few quiet spots from Tre Tucker at 2.2, Jameson Williams at 3.7, and Daniel Jones at 10.38, which is usually the mark of a team with enough depth across the card. The call to ride Seasonal Depression held up, but it was right team, wrong shape — projected at 151.6–127.9, delivered at 211.46–179.44.

On the other side, Rob had plenty that would win most weeks. Bo Nix led the way with 25.74 for Denver against Cincinnati, Woody Marks gave Houston 23.9, DK Metcalf produced 18.6 for Pittsburgh, De'Von Achane added 16.1 for Miami, and Jalen Hurts supplied 19.4 for Philadelphia. And yet, Unstoppable Farce had too many low returns gathered in the same place, with Derrick Henry at 5.8, Mark Andrews at 3.0, Juwan Johnson at 2.8, Keon Coleman at 4.5, and Ladd McConkey at 1.1.

There was also one clean lineup note in the background. Jake left 25.4 from Kenneth Gainwell on the bench, while Rob had 14.5 from Marvin Mims and 13.0 from Kyle Pitts unused, so this was not a case of one start/sit choice swinging the whole afternoon. The sharper point is simpler: Seasonal Depression got the week's most forceful rushing line from Jeanty and still had enough receiving volume around it to keep Rob from ever really erasing the gap.

The consequence is clear in FoulknFootball. Jake answers last week's loss with a statement score, while Rob's losing streak extends to three games after a second straight defeat last week.

BearDown (196.74) vs Sanders Boutte on Sunday (157.34)

Dakota rides Dak Prescott and a wide Sunday to a needed BearDown win.

Week 4 in FoulknFootball brought two teams from the bottom of last week's table, and BearDown gave the cleaner response. Dakota beat Eric, 196.74 to 157.34, a margin that grew from strength across the lineup more than any single rescue act. BearDown set the scene early with 12.0 from the Steelers defense, 12.0 from New England's defense, and 17.0 from Cairo Santos, and that kind of floor changes the rest of the afternoon.

The hero was Prescott. Dallas' quarterback gave Dakota 30.96 points against Green Bay on 319 passing yards and 3 touchdown passes, and he even added a rushing score. George Pickens, also for Dallas, was right there with 25.4 on 8 catches for 134 yards and 2 touchdowns, while Chargers rookie Omarion Hampton supplied 22.5 with 128 rushing yards, a score, and 5 catches. The sharp point is simple: BearDown reached 196.74 even with Caleb Williams at 11.78 and Ja'Marr Chase held to 2.3.

On the other side, Sanders Boutte on Sunday had enough real production to stay in the game for a while. Christian McCaffrey gave Eric 20.1 for San Francisco against Jacksonville, Michael Penix posted 18.72 for Atlanta against Washington, C.J. Stroud added 18.42 for Houston against Tennessee, and Chase McLaughlin's 15.0 kept adding useful points. And yet, too many receiver spots stayed quiet at once, with DeAndre Hopkins at 0.0, Chris Godwin at 2.6, Calvin Ridley at 3.0, and Rashid Shaheed at 5.2.

There was not much left unused for either side, which matters in a format this deep. Dakota left 10.8 coulda-shoulda points on the bench, Eric left 14.5, and the result reads much the same either way. This was BearDown winning the broader card.

The consequence is immediate. Dakota snaps BearDown's two-game losing streak from Week 3, and after entering from seventh place, gets the exact kind of result that can steady a season before the middle of the schedule arrives.

He hate me (178.64) vs Disappointment (158.06)

He hate me has just enough across the board to turn back Disappointment.

Week 4 in FoulknFootball brought two teams from the upper half of the early table, and the scoring held to that standard. Dave's He hate me beat Michael's Disappointment, 178.64 to 158.06, in a game that was rarely about one overwhelming number and more about the breadth of Dave's card. Josh Allen set the tone with 24.86 for Buffalo against New Orleans, James Cook added 19.50 in the same game, and Drake London gave Atlanta 17.00 on eight catches for 110 yards and a score against Washington.

The interesting part is that He hate me won cleanly without getting a full week from every star. Lamar Jackson, acquired in that Week 3 quarterback trade, managed just 10.68 for Baltimore against Kansas City, and Keenan Allen gave Dave only 3.70. And yet, there was enough support to keep the floor high: Emeka Egbuka scored 16.10 for Tampa Bay, Davante Adams added 11.60 for the Rams, and Dave got 24 combined points from Harrison Butker and Brandon McManus. The call to ride He hate me held up, though it was right team, wrong shape — projected 170.2 to 141.5, delivered 178.64 to 158.06.

On the other side, Michael had quarterback play good enough to carry many weeks. Patrick Mahomes threw four touchdown passes and scored 27.30 for Kansas City against Baltimore, Baker Mayfield added 18.86 for Tampa Bay against Philadelphia, and the Eagles defense supplied 16.00. Tyler Warren's 13.30 for Indianapolis and Jahmyr Gibbs' 15.70 for Detroit were solid returns too, but Disappointment asked too much of the receiver room all at once.

That was the turn in the matchup. A.J. Brown finished with 0.70 for Philadelphia, Calvin Austin had 1.30, Jakobi Meyers scored 3.00, DJ Moore 3.80, and Tee Higgins 3.20, and those quieter totals left Michael chasing despite a strong total overall. Michael did have 23.22 from Drake Maye on the bench, but his coulda-shoulda gap was just 15.66; this was less about one missed start/sit call than a lineup that never found enough lift at wideout.

The consequence is immediate. Dave moves to 3-1 after posting the week's best number in Week 3 and now extending that run with another win, while Michael's two-game winning streak ends as He hate me keeps hold of its place near the top of FoulknFootball.

Storylines

- The line between fourth and fifth is the first one that matters right now, and Michael enters Week 5 trying to keep Disappointment from slipping further from the projected playoff field.
- Brian and Jake have both built profiles that hold up week after week, so their meeting is an early test of whether first place has a clear challenger or a clear owner.
- Rob and Devin sit at 1-3 with enough points to stay relevant, which makes this next result feel more important than most Week 5 games usually do.
- Dakota's jump to fourth in both the standings and power rankings is real; a strong follow-up against Dave would turn a good correction into a broader statement.
