

Week 9 Recap — FoulknFootball (2025)

Generated 2026-04-27 00:36 UTC.

Stakes this week

- BearDown on a 4-game losing streak — Dakota's squad needs a win to stop the bleeding.

Intro

With two weeks left before the trade deadline, Week 9 in FoulknFootball felt like the point where patience starts to cost something. The teams at the top are not only trying to hold ground now; they are deciding whether one more move can separate them from the pack, while the teams in the lower half have to choose whether the playoff chase is still the right chase. That mood sat over the whole slate, and the biggest game of the week made the point plainly enough. Dave's 249.78 in a win over Brian was the highest score on the board and the highest single-team total of the season so far in FoulknFootball.

It also changed the shape of the table without changing the central truth. Brian still sits first at 7-2 despite the loss, Jake remains in firm second, and the middle continues to compress around the final playoff place. Last week's recap asked whether Rob's scoring profile could keep arguing with his record; this week, it could not. Unstoppable Farce fell again, posted the week's low score at 139.92, and now the decisions ahead feel different than they did even seven days ago.

League Themes

The dominant thread still begins with Brian, even in defeat. First in and First Out? had its seven-game winning streak stopped last week, and now the more durable marker keeps growing: nine straight weeks above 150. Jake matched that standard with Seasonal Depression's ninth straight game over 150 as well, which gives FoulknFootball two teams whose weekly floor has become part of the standings. That kind of consistency matters in November, because it keeps pressure on everyone else to decide whether they are chasing a seed, chasing a spot, or thinking further ahead.

Dave supplied the week's clearest statement. He hate me climbed two spots in the power rankings to No. 3, tied for the second-best power score in the league, and then backed that rise with 249.78 against the first-place team. Brock Bowers at 31.3 and Drake London at 29.8 gave Dave elite returns, and that top-end production was enough to turn a good week into the league's best one. One sharp detail says it well: when a team beats first place by more than 80 points, the climb in the rankings no longer feels theoretical.

The middle of the standings remains the busiest part of the league. Eric has now won three straight, and Sanders Boutte on Sunday has scored 150 or more in six consecutive weeks, which keeps the team on the playoff line with a profile that looks sturdier than a typical No. 4 seed. Devin also continues upward with a second straight win, and Amon Another level has moved up two spots in the power rankings to No. 5 after slipping past Michael in the week's narrowest margin, 171.22 to 162.04. That result did not make noise like Dave's did, but it mattered just as much in the standings.

On waivers, the best immediate hit belonged to Eric. Geno Smith gave Sanders Boutte on Sunday 26.26 points right away, the strongest return among this week's adds, and it is the kind of move that helps a contender keep pace without needing a major trade. Rob also found a useful number with Colston Loveland at 23.8, though it arrived in a losing effort. The trade market did move, even if only once: Rob sent DK Metcalf to Michael and received Luke McCaffrey plus a 2026 fifth-round pick. The timing was notable, and so was the first return. Metcalf gave Michael only 0.6 this week, so the larger verdict will wait.

There were enough stat-line swings to fit the week's larger mood. Caleb Williams smashed a 12.0 projection with 36.7 for Dakota, Brock Bowers turned a 6.1 projection into 31.3 for Dave, and Drake London nearly tripled his 12.1 projection with 29.8. On the other side, C.J. Stroud's 4.4 against a 20.6 projection hurt Eric far more than it should have in a win, Patrick Mahomes' 10.5 against 26.9 kept Brian from answering Dave's surge, and Jonathan Taylor's 5.7 against a 28.7 projection was the kind of miss first-place teams can absorb only so often. Rob's week carried two of the harsher notes at once: DK Metcalf produced 0.6 in his final appearance before the trade, and Unstoppable Farce extended its losing streak to four with the league's lowest score.

Game by Game

He hate me (249.78) vs First in and First Out? (166.20)

Dave and He hate me turn the table on Brian.

Week 9 in FoulknFootball opened with the league leader on one side and a team trying to steady itself on the other. By Sunday's end, it was Dave's He hate me with the bigger, cleaner afternoon, beating Brian's First in and First Out? 249.78 to 166.20. The hero was Brock Bowers, and the Raiders tight end gave Dave 31.3 points against Jacksonville on 12 catches, 127 yards, and three touchdowns.

The call last week was for Brian to keep rolling, projected at 176.2 to 166.1, and that missed the shape of this one entirely. Dave not only won, he cleared his projection by more than 80 points, and He hate me showcased their aspirations with strength at the top of the lineup and enough support behind it. Josh Allen scored 28.82 for Buffalo against Kansas City, Lamar Jackson added 25.56 for Baltimore against Miami, and Drake London delivered 29.8 for Atlanta against New England with three touchdown catches.

And yet, what stands out most is that Dave had room to absorb a miss and never let the result get tight. Alvin Kamara finished at -0.3 for New Orleans against Los Angeles, Tetairoa McMillan gave him 4.6, and Keenan Allen added 4.1. On the other side, Brian got a good number from Justin Herbert, who posted 27.7 for the Chargers against Tennessee, and Dalton Kincaid helped with 16.1 for Buffalo. It was not enough, because Patrick Mahomes managed 10.5 for Kansas City, Jonathan Taylor had 5.7 for Indianapolis, and Rome Odunze was held to 0.0 for Chicago.

Dave's lineup kept producing in too many places for Brian to make up ground. Sam LaPorta scored 15.7 for Detroit, Davante Adams added 18.0 for the Rams, Kyren Williams brought 17.4 against the Saints, and the Dallas defense chipped in 13.0. Meanwhile, Brian had useful pieces rather than swing pieces: Travis Etienne and Kareem Hunt each scored 11.5, Bijan Robinson had 9.6, and Nico Collins finished with 7.5 on 11 targets for Houston. One sharp detail tells the story: He hate me got four players at 25 points or better; First in and First Out? had one.

The consequence is a clear one near the top of the table. Brian's seven-game winning streak is over, and First in and First Out?'s run of eight straight weeks above 150 continues in defeat, while Dave answers a two-game slide with a result that keeps He hate me firmly in the Week 15 playoff race.

Seasonal Depression (193.68) vs BearDown (166.80)

Jake gets the better of Dakota as Seasonal Depression stays on pace.

Week 9 in FoulknFootball asked for a real number, and both teams gave one. Jake's Seasonal Depression beat Dakota's BearDown, 193.68 to 166.80, in a matchup that easily cleared expectation on both sides. The margin was not built on perfection. It was built on Jake having more answers across the full card, and one quarterback line in particular set the tone.

The hero was Sam Darnold. Seattle's quarterback gave Seasonal Depression 27.2 points against Washington, throwing for 330 yards and four touchdowns, and that gave Jake a steady center even with quieter returns from Emanuel Wilson at 1.7, Javonte Williams at 6.3, and Khalil Shakir at 4.3. Puka Nacua added 15.8 for the Rams against New Orleans, Josh Jacobs scored 16.0 for Green Bay against Carolina, and Ka'imi Fairbairn's 15.0 helped round out a lineup that showcased their aspirations without needing every spot to land big.

On the other side, Dakota had the top individual score in the game. Caleb Williams was excellent for Chicago against Cincinnati, finishing with 36.7 points on 280 passing yards, three passing touchdowns, a receiving touchdown, and 53 rushing yards. Marvin Harrison added 15.6 for Arizona against Dallas, Brian Robinson chipped in 11.3 for Atlanta against the Giants, and Pittsburgh's defense supplied 20.0. And yet, BearDown had too many modest returns at once. Tyrone Tracy scored 3.7, Jordan Mason had 3.7, Deebo Samuel finished at 4.4, and Darnell Mooney managed 1.5.

One sharp detail explains the outcome. Dakota got the biggest star turn of the night from Caleb Williams, but Jake won the deeper portions of the lineup. Darnold, Nacua, Jacobs, Ashton Jeanty at 14.9, Michael Pittman at 11.5, Quentin Johnston at 11.3, Cameron Dicker at 11.0, and Jameson Williams at 12.6 kept Seasonal Depression moving even when Daniel Jones threw three interceptions and several flex spots stayed ordinary.

The consequence is clear in the Week 9 picture. Seasonal Depression extends its run to nine straight weeks above 150, and BearDown takes the fourth straight loss that last week's forecast warned about.

Amon Another level (171.22) vs Disappointment (162.04)

Devin gets enough late from the right places, and Amon Another level slips past Michael.

Week 9 in FoulknFootball asked for real scoring, and both teams gave it. Devin's Amon Another level beat Michael's Disappointment, 171.22 to 162.04, in a game where the board stayed active from the quarterback spots all the way through the defenses. The hero was Jaxson Dart. The Giants quarterback gave Devin 27.24 points against San Francisco, throwing for 191 yards and two touchdowns while adding 56 rushing yards and another score on the ground.

We picked Disappointment coming in, and that call missed cleanly. The two-game streak we cited for Michael did not carry through, while Devin's lineup found better lift in the swing spots; Kyle Monangai's 19.8 for Chicago against Cincinnati was one of the clearest examples, and the Baltimore and Arizona defenses added 17.0 and 16.0 to steady the full card.

On the other side, Michael had more than enough offense to win most weeks. Joe Flacco was excellent for Cincinnati against Chicago, piling up 470 passing yards and four touchdowns for 30.7 points, while Tee Higgins added 26.1 on seven catches, 121 yards, and two scores. DJ Moore supplied 18.98 with a rushing touchdown and a passing touchdown mixed in, and Jaylen Warren's two rushing scores brought 14.9 more.

And yet, this game turned on how well each team absorbed its misses. Devin survived Bryce Young's 2.98 for Carolina and still got useful work from David Montgomery, Justin Jefferson, Amon-Ra St. Brown, Stefon Diggs, Evan McPherson, and Brandon McManus, while Michael was asked to carry too many quiet spots at once.

Jahmyr Gibbs finished with 2.8 for Detroit, DK Metcalf had 0.6, George Kittle scored 2.9, Tyler Warren added 2.6, and the two defenses combined for just 3.0.

The consequence is a simple one in the middle of the FoulknFootball race. Michael's two-game winning streak ends here, and Devin's Amon Another level records a second straight win after last week's result, the kind of answer that showcased their aspirations in the playoff chase.

Sanders Boutte on Sunday (163.08) vs Unstoppable Farce (139.92)

Eric gets the stronger ground game, and Sanders Boutte on Sunday turns back Rob.

Week 9 in FoulknFootball set up as a useful measuring stick for two teams that had been scoring well of late, and Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday had the steadier answer. Eric beat Rob, 163.08 to 139.92, in a matchup where both sides finished below projection, but one side had the clearer lift from its best players. The hero was Christian McCaffrey. San Francisco's back delivered 29.3 points against the Giants, with 106 rushing yards, 67 receiving yards, and two total touchdowns.

That number mattered because Eric got another strong push from Rico Dowdle, who gave Pittsburgh 26.1 points against Green Bay on 130 rushing yards and two touchdowns. Trey McBride added 11.5 for Arizona against Dallas, Chase Brown chipped in 11.2 for Cincinnati against Chicago, and Sanders Boutte on Sunday did enough around a few quiet spots to keep control. And yet, the sharper observation is this: Eric survived 4.36 from C.J. Stroud, 0.0 from Kayshon Boutte, and 2.0 from Tucker Kraft because his running backs carried the weight cleanly.

On the other side, Rob had credible quarterback work. Trevor Lawrence scored 21.2 for Jacksonville against Las Vegas, and Bo Nix added 18.52 for Denver against Houston. Eddy Pineiro's 12.0 and Derrick Henry's 12.1 helped keep Unstoppable Farce within sight. Meanwhile, too many of the middle lineup spots stayed modest at the same time: Woody Marks finished with 2.7, Kimani Vidal had 3.0, Xavier Worthy scored 3.0, and Kyle Pitts managed 3.8.

There was bench help available for both teams, which tells you this was not a perfect card on either side. Eric left Michael Penix's 22.74 and Tory Horton's 16.8 on the bench, while Rob had 14.6 from Mark Andrews and 10.1 from Jauan Jennings unused. But the game itself was won in the starting lineup, and Sanders Boutte on Sunday showcased their aspirations by getting the two biggest running back numbers in the matchup.

The consequence is a familiar one for Eric. Sanders Boutte on Sunday extends its run of 150-plus weeks to six straight, while Rob's Unstoppable Farce sees its own six-week streak above 150 come to an end.

Storylines

- Brian's hold on first is still intact, but a loss to Eric would tighten the top of FoulknFootball and give Sanders Boutte on Sunday a fourth straight win against the league leader.
- Dakota's four-game slide is now the clearest pressure point in the standings, because another loss would make the climb toward the top four much steeper.
- Dave has the week's biggest upward push behind him, and Week 10 will test whether the No. 3 power-ranking jump was a true shift or one huge Sunday.
- Rob is running out of ordinary weeks; a fifth straight loss would keep Unstoppable Farce pointed more toward roster decisions than playoff math.
