

Week 12 Recap — FoulknFootball (2025)

Generated 2026-04-27 00:40 UTC.

Intro

Three weeks remain in the regular season, and FoulknFootball has reached the part of the schedule where the standings only tell half the story. The records matter, but so do the weekly totals sitting behind them, because every point now has a second use when the tiebreakers come into view. The middle of the table is still tight enough that one good Sunday can lift a team into the bracket, and one thin lineup can leave an owner studying the rest of the route a little more carefully.

The highest-scoring game gave the week its clearest statement. Michael's Disappointment put up 196.60 against Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday, a total built around Jahmyr Gibbs' 44.4 and strong enough to keep Michael firmly in the four-team race. Up top, Brian's First in and First Out? kept first place and stretched its run of 150-plus weeks to 12, while just beneath that line Jake, Michael, Eric, Rob, and Devin all continue to live in a standings pocket where the margin for error is now very small.

League Themes

Michael had the headline number, and Disappointment earned it cleanly. Gibbs led the entire league with 44.4, the biggest individual score of Week 12 and one of the sharpest projection beaters on the board after clearing a 21.6 expectation by a wide margin. That performance helped push Michael up two spots in the power rankings to No. 3, tied neatly to the broader form line here: Disappointment has now scored 150 or more in four straight weeks, and it no longer feels like a team surviving week to week. It looks like one applying steady pressure to the No. 4 seed line and perhaps a little more than that.

Brian remains the standard for season-long stability. First in and First Out? improved to 10-2, moved back to No. 1 in the power rankings, and extended its 150-plus streak to 12 straight weeks. That is the longest and most reliable marker in FoulknFootball right now, and it matters because the teams chasing him have been more uneven from Sunday to Sunday. Dave is still right there in second place and He hate me has also reached four straight games above 150, but Brian's version of consistency is what keeps him at the top of the standings even when the weekly high score belongs elsewhere.

The strongest waiver return belonged to Michael as well. John Metchie gave Disappointment 12.5 points, the best immediate production among this week's additions, with Shedeur Sanders adding 10.26 as useful depth behind him. Eric was active at quarterback and got 14.52 from Davis Mills and 14.2 from Geno Smith, solid enough numbers on their own, though not enough to change the result of a difficult week. Rob's Andrei Iosivas brought 6.6, while other waiver moves were more about coverage than immediate impact. There were no trades this week, which fit the point on the calendar. By now, most teams are living with the roster they have.

A few stat lines gave Week 12 its sharper edges. Gibbs was the obvious surge, but Jaxon Smith-Njigba's 29.1 for Dave and Emanuel Wilson's 24.5 for Jake were also timely lifts in meaningful spots. On the other side, several heavy names fell well short: Josh Allen scored 8.1 against a 28.5 projection, Jonathan Taylor posted 6.6 against 29.7, Saquon Barkley came in at 5.4 against 13.2, and Baker Mayfield managed just 3.5 against 13.7. Jake's Seasonal Depression deserves the hardest season-arc note here. The record is now 6-6 after a third straight loss, and the recent scoring dip is real, down to 143.39 points per game over the last three weeks from a 173.74 season average. In the same section of the standings, Rob's Unstoppable Farce has moved the other way, up two spots in the power rankings to No. 4 while extending a three-game win streak that has brought him back into the playoff conversation.

Game by Game

He hate me (192.44) vs BearDown (176.72)

Jaxon Smith-Njigba lifts Dave past Dakota in a game that outran the forecast.

Week 12 in FoulknFootball opened like the kind of matchup that might follow the script, and Dave's He hate me did get the result we expected in a 192.44-176.72 win over Dakota's BearDown. The margin was 15.72, but this was not the easy shape the projection suggested. Both teams cleared 175, and the game held its tension because BearDown kept answering even after Dave found the best receiver on the board.

That receiver was Jaxon Smith-Njigba. Seattle's wideout gave Dave 29.1 points against Tennessee on eight catches for 167 yards and two touchdowns, while Davante Adams added 18.2 for the Rams, James Cook brought 18.9 for Buffalo, Rashee Rice chipped in 16.1 for Kansas City, and Dave got a steady 29 combined points from Harrison Butker and Zane Gonzalez. We had He hate me last week at 181.4-123.7, so the call on the winner held up, but the score was wrong by a fair amount. Dakota made this much more substantial than that.

On the other side, BearDown had more than enough offense to win in many weeks. Dak Prescott led the way with 27.06 for Dallas against Philadelphia, Caleb Williams added 21.66 for Chicago against Pittsburgh, Wan'Dale Robinson gave Dakota 21.6 on 14 targets, and George Pickens supplied 20.6 in the same Dallas passing game that carried Prescott. Darnell Mooney's 13.4 and Tyrone Tracy's 13.0 kept the middle of the lineup working, and that is why a team with a zero from Ja'Marr Chase and another from David Njoku still reached 176.72.

And yet, the sharp detail sits with Dave's quarterbacks. Josh Allen and Lamar Jackson combined for only 15.34, and He hate me still got to 192.44. That usually means the rest of the lineup left very little room unused. Smith-Njigba gave Dave the ceiling, the kickers gave him the floor, and Dakota's misses at a few starting spots left BearDown just short despite a much stronger afternoon than expected.

The consequence is a clear one in the regular-season race. Dave's He hate me follows last week's 209.70 with another win above 190, and that push should keep the pressure on near the top of FoulknFootball while Dakota, coming off last week's win, could not turn it into back-to-back results to look to build momentum.

Disappointment (196.60) vs Sanders Boutte on Sunday (147.22)

Jahmyr Gibbs carries Disappointment past Sanders Boutte on Sunday.

Week 12 in FoulknFootball opened with two 5-6 teams trying to hold their place in the middle of the regular-season race, and by the end Michael had the cleaner, stronger afternoon. Disappointment beat Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday, 196.60 to 147.22, a 49.38-point margin that matched the feel of the scoreboard. The hero was Jahmyr Gibbs. Detroit's back turned in 44.4 points against the Giants, with 219 rushing yards, 11 catches for 45 receiving yards, and three total touchdowns.

That number gave Michael room to absorb a few quiet spots and still keep control. A.J. Brown added 17.0 for Philadelphia against Dallas, DJ Moore scored 18.4 with two touchdowns for Buffalo against Pittsburgh, and the Atlanta defense supplied 16.0. Jaylen Warren's 12.8 and Tyler Loop's 11.0 helped round out the card, and that mattered because Disappointment also carried misses from Baker Mayfield at 3.54, Tee Higgins at 3.1, and Ricky Pearsall at 0.8.

On the other side, Eric had useful work from Christian McCaffrey, who posted 20.2 for San Francisco against Carolina, while the Rams defense gave 18.0 and both Geno Smith and Davis Mills finished above 14 points. Jason Myers added 12.0, Chase Brown contributed 13.0, and there was enough steady production to stay near projection. And yet, Sanders Boutte on Sunday never found the one number that could answer Gibbs, especially with Nick Chubb at 1.5, Olamide Zaccheaus at 0.6, Rashid Shaheed at 0.5, and Dont'e Thornton at 1.4.

The sharp detail here is that Michael won comfortably without getting a full lineup-wide eruption. Disappointment had several starters miss projection, but one elite performance at the top and just enough support beneath it was more than enough. Eric, meanwhile, got very little help from the bench anyway, so this was settled mostly where these two teams chose to play it.

The consequence is specific. After entering Week 12 tied at 5-6 and with Eric sitting one spot ahead in last week's standings, Michael's win is the result that can push Disappointment past Sanders Boutte on Sunday in the playoff picture — exactly the swing this part of the FoulknFootball season is built on, and one Michael can now look to build momentum from.

First in and First Out? (162.84) vs Seasonal Depression (149.98)

Brian keeps First in and First Out? on its line, holding off Jake's big swings.

Week 12 in FoulknFootball opened with the feel of a game that would ask both lineups for depth, and it got exactly that. Brian's First in and First Out? beat Jake's Seasonal Depression 162.84 to 149.98, a solid result built on sturdy running back production and just enough cover for a few light spots elsewhere. The hero was Derrick Henry. Baltimore's veteran gave Brian 20.8 points against the Jets, with 64 rushing yards and two touchdowns, and he sat at the center of a lineup that again found its way into the 160s.

Brian had help around him. Quinshon Judkins scored 16.7 for Cleveland with two rushing touchdowns against Las Vegas, Travis Etienne added 17.6 for New Orleans against Arizona, and Cleveland's defense brought in 18.0. On the other side, Jake made this a real afternoon with Emanuel Wilson's 24.5 points for Seattle against Minnesota and Ashton Jeanty's 16.8 for Las Vegas against Cleveland, while Sam Darnold added 17.66. We had the right team last week, but the wrong shape of it — the call was First in and First Out? 166.3-136.8, and Jake pushed well past that projection even in the loss.

And yet, this game turned on how much Brian could survive. Jonathan Taylor's 6.6 for Indianapolis against Kansas City was his sharpest miss, Jordan Love gave Green Bay only 7.06 against Minnesota, and Dalton Schultz managed 0.8 for Houston against Buffalo. Brian still had enough adult production across the running back line to carry the card. Jake, meanwhile, had a little too much empty space to overcome. D'Andre Swift finished with 0.9 for Chicago against Pittsburgh, Jameson Williams gave Detroit 0.0 against the Giants, and Jordan Addison also finished at 0.0 for Minnesota.

There were points left behind for Jake, most notably Daniel Jones' 16.84 on the bench and Kenneth Gainwell's 12.2, and that is the sharp detail here. Seasonal Depression scored 149.98 despite taking two zeros and a sub-

1.0 from starting skill spots, which tells you the lineup had more life than the final margin suggests. Brian did not need much generosity from the rest of the board because Henry, Judkins, Etienne, and the Browns defense kept First in and First Out? upright all day.

The consequence is a familiar one by now. Brian extends First in and First Out?'s run to 12 straight games above 150, and in a regular season that runs only through Week 15, that is the kind of weekly floor that lets a first-place team look to build momentum rather than search for answers.

Unstoppable Farce (160.38) vs Amon Another level (146.92)

Hurts leads Unstoppable Farce past Amon Another level .

Week 12 in FoulknFootball had the feel of a game that would ask both lineups to keep answering, and Rob's Unstoppable Farce did just a little more of it in a 160.38-146.92 win over Devin's Amon Another level . The margin was 13.46, close enough to stay honest throughout, but the top of Rob's lineup gave the afternoon its shape. The hero was Jalen Hurts, and Philadelphia's quarterback delivered 30.86 points against Dallas with 289 passing yards, three total touchdowns, and no interceptions.

Hurts had real support. Kareem Hunt added 17.0 on 104 rushing yards and a touchdown against Indianapolis, Green Bay's defense matched that 17.0, and Andy Borregales supplied 16.0 from the kicking spot. That was important because Unstoppable Farce also carried some light returns, with Mark Andrews held to 1.1 against the Jets and Chris Godwin to 0.9 against the Rams. One sharp detail explains the result: Rob reached 160.38 without needing every premium slot to land cleanly.

On the other side, Devin had enough offense to win in plenty of weeks. Amon-Ra St. Brown was his best player with 20.9 for Detroit against the Giants, turning 13 targets into nine catches, 149 yards, and a touchdown, while Hunter Henry gave New England 17.5 on 115 yards and a score against Cincinnati. Kirk Cousins added 14.46, Evan McPherson chipped in 12.0, and Kyle Monangai found the end zone for Chicago. And yet, too much of the wide receiver room stayed quiet. Stefon Diggs finished with 2.0, Cooper Kupp with 2.4, and Justin Jefferson with 4.8.

There were points left behind for Devin, most notably Jameis Winston's 31.24 on the bench, but this game was decided first by the starters each side trusted. Rob did leave 17.14 from Trevor Lawrence and 16.0 from Houston's defense unused, though Unstoppable Farce still got the cleaner game where it mattered most, at quarterback and on the defensive line of the box score.

The consequence is a simple one. After winning in Week 11, Rob extends Unstoppable Farce's streak to three straight victories and keeps a late push alive as the bottom half of FoulknFootball looks to build momentum.

Storylines

- The No. 4 seed is the clean pressure point of Week 13, with Michael, Eric, Rob, and Devin all still close enough that one result could move the line again.
- Brian's 12-week run above 150 now meets another direct test, and every successful defense of first place makes the rest of the bracket work from farther back.
- Jake's three-game slide has become the week's most urgent correction, because another quiet total would put real stress on a playoff spot that looked steadier not long ago.
- Rob can look to build momentum from the bottom half into the middle race, while Dakota is playing to keep the last-place pressure from tightening further.
