Jake's Seasonal Depression — 2025 FoulknFootball Champion

Defeated Michael's Disappointment in the championship. Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday won the consolation bowl and the 1.01 next year. Dakota's BearDown finishes last and forfeits a keeper.

Stakes this week

- Championship — Seasonal Depression vs Disappointment — League title on the line.
- 3rd-place game — First in and First Out? vs He hate me — Winner finishes 3rd (pick 1.06 next year); loser finishes 4th (pick 1.05).
- Consolation final — Sanders Boutte on Sunday vs Amon Another level (winner gets the 1.01) — The 1.01 next year goes to the winner of this game. Loser gets pick 1.02.
- 7th-place game — BearDown vs Unstoppable Farce (loser finishes last and forfeits a keeper) — Winner gets pick 1.03. Loser finishes last for the season and loses one keeper slot (3 of 4).
- Coldest team in the league — BearDown has dropped 6 straight — Dakota hasn't won in over a month and a half. Every week the season slips a little further.

Intro

The season closes with Jake standing alone at the top of FoulknFootball. Seasonal Depression won the championship in Week 17, beating Michael's Disappointment 187.60 to 139.18, and that final felt like the cleanest version of the team Jake became in December. The rise was there before the title game if you were watching closely. Seasonal Depression entered the playoffs as the league's clearest late riser, then removed the No. 1 seed, then finished the job with the highest score of championship week.

That is the arc that deserves to be remembered. Jake did not come through as the regular-season favorite, but Seasonal Depression became the most dangerous team at exactly the right time, climbing in the power rankings, extending the winning streak to three, and finishing the year on a last-three scoring run that told the truth before the bracket did. In a league where Brian's First in and First Out? supplied the season's steadiest standard and Dave's He hate me spent months as one of the most reliable 150-point teams on the board, Jake found the sharper edge late and kept it.

The rest of the board settled important business too. Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday beat Devin's Amon Another level in the consolation final, which means Eric takes the 1.01 into next season, and Brian closed with a win over Dave to secure third place after a regular season that still set the tone for much of the league. At the bottom, Rob's Unstoppable Farce handled BearDown, and the consequence lands hard because Dakota finishes last, takes the 1.04, and forfeits a keeper slot for next year. That is how 2025 ends in FoulknFootball: Jake with the trophy, Eric with the first pick, and everybody else already measuring what comes next.

League Themes

The defining turn of the season belongs to Jake. Seasonal Depression did not spend the year carrying the cleanest résumé, but by the end it carried the clearest momentum, and those are not always the same thing. The semifinal upset of Brian announced it, yet the signs had been building for weeks in the season ledger and the power movement, with Seasonal Depression's scoring rate pushing well beyond its season norm. One sharp observation fits the whole run: Jake's team was not the best from wire to wire, but it was the best when the season asked the hardest question.

Brian's season deserves its own clear line because consistency is harder than it looks. First in and First Out? scored 150 or more in all 17 weeks, finished 14-3, led the standings, and still had to settle for third after one playoff loss and one narrow win over Dave in the finale. That is the cold part of this format, and also the honest one. Brian set the weekly standard in FoulknFootball, but the bracket asked for two specific answers in Weeks 16 and 17, and only one of them arrived.

There was also a lesson in how narrow the middle of this league stayed all year. Michael reached the championship after entering the playoffs hot, then ran into Jake's best game at the finish. Dave scored more total regular-season points than anyone except Brian and carried a nine-game 150-plus streak into the final week, but ended on a three-game slide and finished fourth. Eric, meanwhile, kept enough life in Sanders Boutte on Sunday to turn the consolation side into something real, and the reward is substantial because the 1.01 now belongs to him. In this league, the main bracket decided the title, but the back half of the bracket still changed next season.

If one roster move gets the last word, it is modest rather than dramatic. There were no trades to redraw the league, and most of the late waiver work came from Michael chasing usable depth in the final week, with Terrance Ferguson the cleanest return among those adds. That says something useful about the season as a whole. FoulknFootball in 2025 was shaped less by one blockbuster transaction than by team identities that held over time — Brian's weekly floor, Jake's late surge, Eric's survival on the consolation path, and BearDown's long slide to the keeper penalty.

Game by Game

Seasonal Depression (187.60) vs Disappointment (139.18) — Championship

Jake crowns Seasonal Depression champion with a clear final over Michael.

The last game of the season in FoulknFootball carried the weight it should, and Jake's Seasonal Depression met it cleanly. In the championship, Seasonal Depression beat Michael's Disappointment 187.60 to 139.18, a decisive victory that settled the league's 2025 title and placed the trophy in Jake's hands. The score did not come from a perfect card, but it came from the right kind of top end.

The hero was Brock Purdy. San Francisco's quarterback gave Jake 36.92 points against Chicago, throwing for 303 yards and three touchdowns while adding 28 rushing yards and two more scores on the ground, and that one line changed the shape of the matchup. D'Andre Swift added 19.9 for Chicago against San Francisco, Luther Burden brought 19.8 in that same game, Michael Wilson scored 14.9 for Arizona against Cincinnati, and Jordan Addison found 12.5 on a 65-yard rushing touchdown for Minnesota against Detroit.

On the other side, Michael got one strong answer from Drake Maye. New England's rookie posted 32.44 points against the Jets on 256 passing yards and five touchdowns, while Brandon Aubrey's 16.0 and Tyler Loop's 11.0 kept Disappointment within sight for a while. And yet, this championship turned on how many skill spots never really arrived. Jahmyr Gibbs finished with 4.4, A.J. Brown had 6.8, Tee Higgins 5.9, DJ Moore 0.7, and Alec Pierce 0.0.

What stands out is that Jake won this title while carrying real misses of his own. Sam Darnold managed 6.08, Josh Jacobs gave 0.3, Taysom Hill finished at 0.0, and Jameson Williams added 3.7, but Seasonal Depression had enough coverage across the rest of the lineup to keep moving. One sharp detail says most of it: Jake beat his projection by more than 24 points in the season's biggest game, while Michael finished a little more than six points short of his own.

The consequence is the one every week was pointing toward. Jake is the 2025 FoulknFootball champion, Seasonal Depression takes the trophy, and Michael's late run ends as the league runner-up after Disappointment's streak of eight straight weeks above 150 comes to a stop in the final.

First in and First Out? (183.56) vs He hate me (175.34) — 3rd-place game

Brother Bowl: Brian takes third as First in and First Out? edges He hate me.

In FoulknFootball's 3rd-place game, the family hook was easy to spot, but the score gave this one its real shape. Brian's First in and First Out? beat Dave's He hate me, 183.56 to 175.34, in a high-stakes battle that stayed close enough to matter all the way through. The difference was not breadth so much as force. Brian had the two biggest runners on the board, and Dave spent the afternoon answering rather than dictating.

The hero was Derrick Henry. Baltimore's veteran carried 36 times for 216 yards and four touchdowns against Green Bay, good for 45.6 fantasy points, and Bijan Robinson gave Brian another 34.9 for Atlanta against Los Angeles with 195 rushing yards and two total touchdowns. Jonathan Taylor added 14.4 for Indianapolis, and that was enough cover for quieter returns from Nico Collins, Jaylen Waddle, and Dalton Schultz. We missed this one in last week's forecast. The call was He hate me, 171.3 to 162.7, but the Brother Bowl turned on the X-factor we named and read the wrong way, because Brian's long 150-plus run did not break after all.

On the other side, Dave still posted a professional number. Josh Allen gave He hate me 23.18 for Buffalo against Philadelphia, the Vikings defense added 23.0, and Zane Gonzalez chipped in 13.0, while RJ Harvey and Kyren Williams kept the backfield moving with 13.6 and 13.0. And yet, this matchup was decided by where the misses landed. Drake London finished with 0.4 for Atlanta, Tetairoa McMillan had 0.5 for Carolina, and James Cook's 7.7 left Dave just short of matching Brian's top-end production.

There was bench regret on both sides, though more of it for Brian. First in and First Out? left 36.7 coulda-shoulda points unused, with Audric Esteime's 15.8 and the Browns defense's 12.0 standing out, while He hate me left 15.6 on the bench. In a game decided by 8.22, that is worth noting, but the sharper observation is simpler: Brian survived several low scores because Henry and Robinson gave him a weekly ceiling few teams can reach.

The consequence is clear and specific. Brian wins FoulknFootball's 3rd-place game, finishes third, and takes next year's 1.06 pick, while Dave finishes fourth and slots into 1.05, and Brian's season-long streak of 150-plus points extends through all 17 weeks.

Sanders Boutte on Sunday (187.36) vs Amon Another level (157.78) — Consolation final Cousin vs Nephew: Eric claims the consolation crown and the 1.01.

In the FoulknFootball consolation final, the family hook gave the matchup its title, but the real weight was in the prize. Eric's Sanders Boutte on Sunday beat Devin's Amon Another level 187.36 to 157.78, a decisive victory in a game that carried next year's first overall pick. Eric set the tone with range across the roster, and even a few zeroes never pulled him out of control.

The hero was Chase Brown. Cincinnati's back ran for 101 yards and two touchdowns, added three catches for 40 yards, and finished with 26.1 points against Arizona. Christian McCaffrey gave Eric 24.1 for San Francisco against Chicago, Zach Charbonnet added 24.2 for Seattle against Carolina, and Jacory Croskey-Merritt chipped in 22.5 for Washington against Dallas. One sharp detail says most of it: Sanders Boutte on Sunday reached 187.36 despite getting 0.0 from Marcus Mariota and Darren Waller, and 0.0 from Kayshon Boutte as well.

On the other side, Devin had enough early production to make this respectable. Jaxson Dart led Amon Another level with 25.08 points for the Giants against Las Vegas, Joe Burrow added 20.4 for Cincinnati against Arizona, Chris Olave brought 17.9 for New Orleans against Tennessee, and Stefon Diggs finished with 16.1. And yet, too many of Devin's usual anchors came in light. Saquon Barkley managed 6.8 for Philadelphia against Buffalo, Amon-Ra St. Brown also had 6.8 for Detroit against Minnesota, Justin Jefferson finished with 3.0, and Cooper Kupp gave just 0.6.

There was start-sit room on Devin's side, with 23.5 points left on the bench, though not enough to overturn a margin of 29.58. Eric's bench swing was smaller at 15.94, and that fits the shape of the afternoon; Sanders Boutte on Sunday simply got more of the right scores into the lineup, especially at running back, where Brown, McCaffrey, Breece Hall, Charbonnet, and Croskey-Merritt kept handing the total forward.

The consequence is concrete and worth saying plainly. Eric wins the FoulknFootball consolation final, takes the consolation championship, and with it secures next year's 1.01; Devin settles for 1.02 after Amon Another level's four-game run of 150-plus scores comes to an end.

Unstoppable Farce (174.72) vs BearDown (125.08) — 7th-place game

Old Guard vs Young Guns: Unstoppable Farce leaves no doubt.

In the 7th-place game in FoulknFootball, the family frame was there at the top, but the sharper truth sat with the penalty attached to last place. Rob's Unstoppable Farce handled Dakota's BearDown, 174.72 to 125.08, and it was a decisive victory in the one game nobody wanted to lose. Rob set the tone early and kept enough answers on the board to make the final margin feel sturdy.

Trevor Lawrence was the hero for Unstoppable Farce. Jacksonville's quarterback gave Rob 23.12 points against Indianapolis, rushing for two scores while throwing for 263 yards, and Rhamondre Stevenson added 22.2 for New England with two touchdowns of his own. Christian Watson brought 17.3 for Green Bay against Baltimore, Devin Singletary scored 13.0 for the Giants against Las Vegas, and Aaron Jones added 12.3 for Minnesota against Detroit. The call to ride Unstoppable Farce held up, though it was right team, wrong shape — projected at 136.8 to 104.1, delivered here at 174.72 to 125.08.

On the other side, Dakota got professional work from both quarterbacks. Caleb Williams threw for 330 yards and two touchdowns for Chicago against San Francisco on his way to 23.0 points, while Dak Prescott matched him closely with 22.68 for Dallas against Washington. Ja'Marr Chase gave BearDown 18.0 for Cincinnati against Arizona, and Wan'Dale Robinson added 11.3 on 11 catches for 113 yards. And yet, this game turned where BearDown could not recover from the zeros. Zonovan Knight, Jordan Mason, David Njoku, and Matt Gay combined for 0.0, and that is too much empty space to carry in a game with this kind of consequence.

Rob had his own quiet spots. Jalen Hurts managed 8.9, Kyle Pitts gave only 1.6, and both Brian Thomas and Ladd McConkey finished under 4.0. But Unstoppable Farce survived the misses because the useful pieces came from too many places at once, and that is often the difference in these end-of-season games. One sharp detail says enough: Rob won by 49.64 even with Mark Andrews and Pitts combining for 4.4 at tight end.

The result is a clean one with a hard edge. Unstoppable Farce finishes 7th and claims the 1.03 pick, while BearDown finishes last in FoulknFootball and goes into next season having forfeited one keeper, down from four to three.

Storylines

- Eric won the consolation final and now holds the 1.01, which makes Sanders Boutte on Sunday the first team on the board when the 2026 draft opens.
- Jake gets the trophy but drafts 1.08, so the champion’s offseason starts from the back of the round with four keepers and a target on Seasonal Depression.
- Dakota enters next year with the 1.04 and only three keeper slots after BearDown finished last, a draft position that helps but does not erase the penalty.
- Brian takes 1.06 after a 14-3 season and a 17-week run above 150, which is exactly the kind of standard that will be tested again the moment next season begins.
